Finishing Up for the Season

Just a few words on the season this year. Well as you all observed it was one of the poorest seasons for duck that we have seen. There were several reasons for this. First the general duck population was down. The reason for this was the weather conditions in Canada were not ideal for young duck survival. The second was that we did not get cold weather in the Pacific Fly way until late and then it was very sporadic. The temperature did not stay below freezing until late November and into December. Well, we can only hope that Next year will bring better conditions. Moreover, the Oregon Department of Fish and Game had their big pump fail with caused flooding out of our front blinds.
